

“All” by Lorelei Kongs

Liberty and justice for all
Unless the all includes another
Another that is not your color

Her and him and them
We musn't be their friend
Not when they do not blend
Not when they do not bend

Their names too strange to learn
Their pain not our concern
Their wins somehow a threat
Their lives a silhouette

So we conquer and lay claim
For our problems we blame
Those we shackled in our name
And rewrote the rules of the game

You pledge allegiance loud
But only to a crowd
That looks like you,
That prays like you,
That is all that is allowed
